The Big London Egg Hunt – Capture the Egg Thief!

Posted by William Wallace on Feb 27, 2012 in News | 7 comments

There are 200 giant sized eggs located around Central London and Canary Wharf...well make that 199 because some toe rag has stolen one of them. More on that later. The 200 fibreglass eggs which stand 2ft 6in are part of charity event called 'The Fabergé Big Egg Hunt' which aims to raise £2 million for the charities' Action for Children and Elephant Family. Call me a cynic but I'm sure plenty of men and woman in fancy suits will be happy bunny's with the money raised from this campaign! How much of the funds raised go to the good causes they are supporting is what I wanna know...

Anyway... each of the eggs have been hand crafted and are designed by a variety of artists, designers and jewellers and are located at not so secret locations...you can download a map to find out exactly where each one is located. They seem to be everywhere...
