

AVE MARIA

Givenchy creative director Riccardo Tisci has never been one to follow the rules. Yesterday, the house dropped news of the designer's collaboration with British artist Benjamin Shine on a new couture project – the sweatshirt. Version 1, shown here, features a diaphanous Madonna figure akin to the label's spring '13 menswear prints. The kicker? The entire piece is rendered from one swath of tulle. Following Raf Simons semi-revolutionary, casual-couture for Christian Dior, Tisci seems to be taking laid-back luxe to a whole new level. Say your prayers.