

The rise of private women's clubs

Eva Simpson

If you are the kind of woman who likes the idea of having a 6.30am craniosacral massage, followed by a slice of pumpernickel bread washed down with a glass of ionised water all before getting to your desk by 7.30am then Grace Belgravia is probably for you.

Likewise if you want the Queen's GP Dr Timothy Evans, the expertise of Samantha Cameron's personal trainer Matt Roberts and an Errol Douglas blow-dry at your fingertips then you won't baulk at the £5,500 annual membership fee to join Britain's first women-only private members club.
